Research

Research Interests

My research is situated within the strategic management discipline, which focuses on understanding how differences in firm strategy influence firm success or failure. I primarily devote my research to understanding the critical role played by strategic leaders—such as Chief Executive Officers (CEOs) and boards of directors (boards)—and mergers and acquisitions (M&As)—instances where firms subsume or combine with other firms. Specifically, when conducting research in these areas, I aim to develop theoretical insights by leveraging temporal and linguistic perspectives (i.e., by focusing on the role of time and language usage). I also have an interest in contributing methodological insights to the discipline, particularly in terms of advancing scholarly understanding around the usage of new and existing methodologies.
